KHAYER BARAH TREK/KHOPRA TREK

Overview

Khayer Barah Trek, also known as Khayer Lake Trek or Khopra Ridge Trek, is one of the most interesting trekking areas in the heart of Annapurna Region. The trail is still less traveled and offers some of the best views of the Annapurna's, Dhaulagiri, and other mountains. The Khayer Barah Trek trail departs from Tadapani, the most popular Annapurna base camp trail, and connects with Ghorepani Poon hill. This trail is especially beautiful in the spring, when various flowers and rhododendron trees bloom. This region's residents' welcome visitors with open arms and strong beliefs in colorful cultural traditions. Every year, there are two major festivals in the Khayer Lake trekking area. Once a month, the entire community gathers on the top of the ridge.

The trekking paths to Khayer Barah pass through dense and lush green forests, with pine, oak, and rhododendron covering the majority of the forest. Meanwhile, you can view the high Himalaya panoramas from various perspectives. You can also see how the green terraced farming lands help to decorate the trail. The Magar and Gurung communities are especially visible in the village.

You will come across Khayer Barah Lake. In addition to the lake, you will have the opportunity to visit the Khayer Barah temple. The Khopra Ridge at 3660m is the highest point of this trek. Among the mountain ranges visible from Khopra Ridge are the Nilgiri, Dhaulagiri, Annapurna, Mt. Fishtail, and Himchuli.

Itinerary

Day 1: Drive from Pokhara to Ulleri and trek to Ghorepani. (2870m)

By taking the traditional trekking route of Nayapul, Birethanti, and driving along the north bank of the Bhurungdi Khola through the villages of the Gurung, Magar, and Thakali people, you can reach Tikhedhunga (1,480m) to Ulleri (2060m) by jeep. From there, you can continue walking steadily up the side of the valley to reach Hile (1950m). Our journey begins when we pass through Ulleri, a sizable Magar settlement (2,060m). The trail then ascends more gradually as it travels through lush oak and rhododendron forests in the direction of Banthanti (2250m). On rare occasions, we catch a glimpse of Langur (the long-tailed, black-mouthed monkey). Then we hike towards Nangethanti (2,450m), arriving at Ghorepani after an hour of walking (2870m).

Destination: Ghorepani

Altitude Gain: 2870

Duration: 1

Accommodation: Lodge

Day 2: Walk to Poon Hill and Trek to Swanta. (2350m)

Early in the morning, we will climb for around 1 hour up to Poon Hill (3210m). This vantage position offers a clear and stunning perspective of the rising sun over the high Himalayas, including giants like Dhaulagiri (8,167m), Annapurna (8,091m), Machhapuchhre, Nilgiri, Hiunchuli, South Annapurna, and others. In addition, we can make out a network of additional peaks that are gradually starting to form in front of our eyes like magic. Before Chitre village, we stroll through the pine and rhododendron trees to reach Swanta after returning to Ghorepani for a hearty breakfast. There is a Magar community in Chitre. You will travel to the Swanta through the Khopra route from there.

Destination: Swanta

Altitude Gain: 2350

Duration: 1

Day 3: Trek to Khopra Danda (3640).

After breakfast, we began our journey to Khopra Danda by climbing a steep uphill trail from Swanta. We'll have lunch at Dhand Kharka in Chistibang after a couple hours of walking.

Despite its steepness, the trail is pleasant, passing through rhododendron and oak forests and providing glimpses of wildlife. Dana Valley has spectacular mountain scenery and views of Andha gorge (the world's deepest gorge) most of the time. The jungle comes alive in the spring with rhododendrons, magnolias, and various orchids that spread perfume.

Finally, we arrive at the Tea House in Khopra, which has an incredible 360-degree view of the western Himalaya range. Khopra Danda is located at an elevation of 3,640 meters, serves as the gateway to the Khayer Barah Tal. The location is worth seeing during ritual thread ceremony festivals.

Altitude Gain: 3640

Accommodation: Lodge

Day 4: Explore day at sacred Khayer Lake and Annapurna South Glacier.

Your excursion today will take you to Khair/ Khayer Lake, a sacred Hindu and Buddhist shrine that is 4,600 meters above sea level. This is the main focus of your journey.

Since there is no habitation beyond the Khopra Danda, you should carry a lunch, a few energy bars, and enough water for the day's journey, along with enough warm clothing.

Despite the hike's length, you get spectacular 360-degree views of the Annapurna Fang, Dhaulagiri, Nilgiri, and nearby mountains.

On the occasion of the August full moon (Janai Purnima), the villagers congregate to this holy lake dressed in their traditional culture, attire, and rituals.

Altitude Gain: 4600

Duration: 7

Day 5: Trek to Bayeli Kharka

Today's trek to the Bayeli Kharka (3437m) is lengthy; the majority of the trail is downhill, but there are also some flat and uphill sections. After we start our trek, a spectacular mountainous landscape is encountered as the trail winds through the upper Himalaya.

There are two trails: higher and lower. During the snowy season, lower route is preferable because upper trail is frozen on the trail, but upper way is excellent for the views. This is a stunning hike with views of Annapurna South, which is 7219 meters high, Himchuli, Fish Tail/Machhapuchhre, Annapurna III, and Annapurna II (7937m).

Destination: Bayeli Kharka

Altitude Gain: 3437

Duration: 1

Day 6: Trek to Tadapani

Our trail descends via an alpine ridge, offering stunning mountain views all the way to Tadapani. On the main road, we can see a lot of hikers today. There are currently two routes to Tadapani, one through Deurali and the other straight. The right track leads to the Deurali when you descend to the Bhaisi Kharka/ Dobato, while the left trail leads to the Tatopani via the Isharu (3137m) and Meshar (2969m) with spectacular views.

The Deurali trail slowly descends along ridges with forests of pine and rhododendron before ascending through the main trekking route with stunning waterfalls, streams, and lush forests to the Banthanti. We hike up to our ultimate destination, Tadapani, which means “far water,” and the village’s water supply is far below. The stream has a few clear pools alongside the way.

Destination: Tadapani

Altitude Gain: 3136

Accommodation: Lodge

Day 7: Trek to Kimche and Drive to Pokhara

We will descend steeply through dense forests with stunning panoramic views of the Ghandruk village, inhabited by Gurung ethnic groups, after enjoying breakfast while taking in the mountain vista. You can see some beautiful sun rises over the mountains if you get up early in the morning. You may explore the second-largest Gurung community in Nepal, the scenic old Gurung village, the museum and the Annapurna conservation office.
